Action Shots

If you take a look at our website (www.drd.co.nz) you'll see how good this is. We have run the twenty 20 camera on every bike we have tested so far and it produces great videos. It does work out a little expensive as you need the right digital camcorder to connect to it. But, the results are amazing.

We chose the helmet mounted option (simply velcro it to the side of the lid) but you can get them to mount to the bike. Coming in at a dry weight of 7oz, the Helmet Camera is the smallest and lightest powersports camera on the market and runs off of a single 9 volt battery. It has a separate microphone with clip and you simply toss the camera and the rest of the pack in a bag or backpack. Just be careful to wrap them in something soft as one lap of Te Teko left our new camcorder looking very secondhand indeed.

Pauls' Package

In the lead up to launching this mag, I decided that my old, tatty gear wasn't going to look too hot in the photos. So, after a bit of a look through the shops, I decided on this set of Acerbis gear.

The matching trousers and jersey are up to the usual Acerbis standard and I chose red to match my aging Sidi boots. As I am planning on doing a bit of adventure riding as well, the Acerbis Impact jacket with airvents, removable liner and plenty of pockets also found its way into my shopping basket.

But, my favorite item is the quick straps that attach my Oakley Goggles to my helmet. They enable you to take your goggles on and off with one hand whilst on the move, essential when they start steaming up.

Acerbis Impact Range
Size: M-XXL
Jacket $299
Jersey $69
Trousers $269
